Deadline reported the switch Wednesday night, noting that Scott is currently scheduling re-shoots with Plummer. Representatives for Scott confirmed the news to Vanity Fair. In the film, Spacey played J. Paul Getty, the oil tycoon who refused to pay a ransom when his grandson was kidnapped. The actor was nearly unrecognizable in the role, covered in makeup and prosthetics. Spacey ultimately worked on the film for about 8 to 10 days, as Getty is vital to the plot but not to the film's adventurous story line. Per Deadline, the cast, crew, and Sony Pictures "agreed unanimously" to re-shoot the film with Plummer once the Spacey allegations began surfacing. Co-stars Mark Wahlberg and Michelle Williams will be cooperating with the shoots, with its onetime tentpole star. Spacey has since been cut from House of Cards, which is currently being re-written to exorcise him from its sixth-season story line. Netflix also decided not to move forward with Gore, a Gore Vidal biopic starring Spacey as the writer, even though that film was already in post-production when the misconduct allegations began.

There have also been more allegations against Spacey in the last 24 hours alone. Former newscaster Heather Unruh announced in a news conference on Wednesday that Spacey allegedly groped her son at a restaurant bar in 2016. Her son was 18 years old at the time. “Kevin planned projects. Other films, like Taylor Sheridan's drama Wind River, came to an agreement that the Weinstein Company logo would be removed from future iterations, including streaming releases, home video releases, and awards-season screeners. In addition, T.W.C.'s future income from the film will be re-routed to the National Indigenous Women's Resource Center, a nonprofit organization.

After the allegations against him originally broke, Spacey apologized to actor Anthony Rapp (who made the allegations that opened up the floodgates), came out as gay, and announced that he is going to seek "evaluation and treatment." Representatives for Spacey have not yet
